EXHIBITION OF CONTEMPORARY INTERNATIONAL LITHOGRAPHS (COURTESY OF THE NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA, OTTAWA)

OPENS DECEMBER 15th, 1936

FOREWORD

LITHOGRAPHY, invented by Alois Senefelder at the close of the eighteenth century, is the most modern of the graphic arts. It was also after the period of its prosperity in the days of Daumier and Gavarni the most neglected but the last few years have seen a great revival of interest in it both on the part of artist and public.

The artist has discovered that it is a medium the resources of which have never been fully explored and has found in its directness and freedom possibilities particularly suited to modern methods of expression. The public on the other hand is beginning to understand and consequently to appreciate the beauty of its qualities.

Much of the interest in lithography to-day is due to the energy and enterprise of the Senefelder Club founded in 1910 for the encouragement of the art with Joseph Pennell as its first president. It has held many international exhibitions of lithographs in Europe and America and last year a special exhibition was organized in honour of the centenary of Alois Senefelder and shown in London and elsewhere. This recent exhibition forms the basis of the present one which has been arranged by the National Gallery and is the first of its kind to be circulated in Canada.
